About the Plastic Ocean Art Exhibit

Bonnie Monteleone, the creator of the exhibit, has collected digital images of plastic artifacts retrieved from four of the five global garbage patches, and has combined them with her own open ocean photography in a traveling art display.

This display has traveled 3,700 miles on a journey to portray how the world's oceans have been scourged by plastics. People are encouraged not only to enjoy the beauty of the art, but to look deeper and question our own contribution of plastics into our oceans, and to make the connection that this growing problem is a global one that affects us all.
